AMUSING OURSELVES TO DEATH: PUBLIC DISCOURSE IN THE AGE OF SHOW BUSINESS BY NEIL POSTMAN PDF

Neil Postman examines the deep and broad effects of television culture on how we conduct our public affairs and how "entertainment values" have corrupted the way we think. As politics, news, religion, education, and commerce are less often expressed in the form of the printed word, they are rapidly being reshaped to suit television. Television is a visual medium whose images are most pleasurably apprehended when they are fast-moving and dynamic, so discourse on television has little tolerance for argument or explanation. Postman argues that public discourse is being converted from exposition to entertainment.

Unpleasant to listen

By Cesar Lizarzaburu

Book read too fast, unable to follow. It's like listen to somebody who is trying to catch a train.

Could not go beyond the first section. Does not worth the price. And is not an editing problem since no distortion is noticed.

It's just a bad reading pace for an audiobook.
