Very basic knowledge

By Mary Lawson

Given the authors description of himself as a clinical educator and specific to cardiac surgery, I expected to see more about epicardial pacing. Where is the discussion about A pacing AF if symptomatic? Using VVI back up while bolusing rapid AF just in case the patient slows down too much? And the emergency DOO mode in the event of asystole after a valve surgery? And all cardiac nurses need to understand the difference between unipolar, bipolar and biventricular epicrdial leads. The Medtronic 5388 temporary pacemaker on the cover of the book lead me to believe the book was more cardiac surgery based.

Great resource...

By William Michna

Simple and to the point. Great resource and quick read for the clinician who wants to familiarize themselves with pacing.
