Objective Acceleration Guide

By Double Bass Cadet

Anyone interested in whole grade school acceleration should buy this book. It is a very accessible reference which guides the user step-by-step through the points to consider when determining whether a student should be accelerated. At the end of the evaluation, a score is generated. Based on this score, a candidate is identified as recommended or not recommended for whole grade acceleration.

There are examples for both recommended and not recommended acceleration. I, and it seems like everyone else who buys this book, wish it included a blank form, because all the forms are filled-in examples. A blank form is available separately and worthwhile, but it appears targeted to schools/districts and may only be available in sets of ten.

During a discussion with one of the authors, I asked about multiple grade skips. She answered that they recommend one grade skip at a time, but after a successful skip, the same criteria (applied at the next grade level) could be used to determine if another skip is recommended.

Belin-Blank Center Knows Giftedness.

By A. Stoll

I might be biased, but I got my TAG endorsement at the Belin-Blank Center. The BBC's reputation in Gifted Education is unparalleled.

I've used this guide twice to determine if a student is a candidate for being advanced a grade level or subject-accelerated a grade level. The guide is easy to understand, and explains in plain terms the reasoning behind eligibility. The IAS is meant to be used by an educator (preferably a gifted-and-talented teacher) to guide the staff, administration, and family through the IAS form (to be purchased separately).

I absolutely recommend this Manual. You won't find anything better!
