Surprising

By Jetpack

This an interesting book. With the name "Prospero Burns" I was expecting the massacre of the Thousand Sons from the Space Wolves perspective. That's not what this is about. It's really the Road to Nikaea and how the Enemy can fool a Primarch.

I found it a bit irritating at times, but I'm really impressed how it all pulls together at the end. Bear is a great character, as well as Howser.

The basic idea of the story is very good, and the flaws of Russ are used quite well against him. Even if you struggle, I'd keep at it for the ending.

If you're a fan...

... you will like this. Good Space Marine power armor action in the grim dark of 40k. Nice "shades of gray" story about a legion and primarch with good intentions pitted against the Emperor's executioner legion.

Best book in the Horus Heresy

By Snottus

I consider most Warhammer fiction simple and straight forward. When you buy a Warhammer novel, you know, most of the time, what you'll get - violence, destruction, killing and explosions. One of the main reasons for why I read Warhammer literature, is not for the novels themselves, but because of the awesome universe they describe. Dark, gritty, unforgiving and usually quite horrible. I love it.

Prospero Burns was, to me, yet another novel set in the Warhammer universe. I had few expectations, other than reading about my favorite legion. I was in for a surprise.

Being used to the simple nature of most Warhammer literature, I was amazed at how daring Mr. Abnett was with this novel. Although there was the required violence and brutality, Mr. Abnett chose to focus this novel on the soul and demeanor of the Vlka Fenryka. Throughout this novel, you are given beautiful insight into the mysteries of the Space Wolves, and I for one, am left with the impression of having read about a sentient pack of wolves, the space faring kind.

Thank you Dan Abnett, for writing something far deeper and more complex than we are usually granted when reading Warhammer.
