A great example of Golden Age detective fiction

By Bracton

I recently stumbled upon Lorac when reading one of the numerous blogs out there that discuss detective fiction, mysteries, etc. A quick look on my bookshelves revealed that I had a copy of Murder by Matchlight that features one of her series characters, Inspector MacDonald. I ended up buying The Devil and the CID, one of her four novels that have been reprinted by Ramble House. The story moves briskly (the book is only 196 pages), and the story line is pretty clever, i.e., how did that corpse end up in the back seat of MacDonald's car and who is it anyway? It's definitely Golden Age detective fiction at its best.
